Reg No | | | | | | | | | | |

13EG16/26

I/II SEMESTER B.Tech EXAMINATIONS DECEMBER 2013.

[for 2013 batch only]

English

Time: 3 Hours Max Marks:*70

Instructions: 1. Answer Allthe Questions

1. Answer any four questions. 01×4=04

Choose the appropriate word for the underlined word

a. It never pays off to abrogate the defense treaty.
(A)Establish (B) Uphold (C) Annul (D) Bolster

b. The frost made bizarre figures on the windowpanes.
(A) Normal (B) Mangy (C) Strange (D) Regular

c. We commiserate with him on his recent bereavement.
(A) Feel sympathy (B) Expand (C) Repay (D) Communicate

d. No one liked her gauche manner
(A) Polished (B) Squeamish (C) Fastidious (D) Awkward

e. The young man is constantly presenting these quixotic schemes.
(A) Pragmatic (B) Practical (C) Realistic (D) Idealistic but impractical

2. Answer any seven questions. 02×07=14

a. Fill in the blanks with a, an or the, wherever necessary

i. Evan is _____ tennis coach. He teaches _____ tennis to _____ students of my school. He is _____ extremely good coach.

ii. Our washerwoman, Madam Chia, comes to our house thrice _____ week. Apart from washing _____ clothes, she sometimes also cleans _____ house. She is paid two hundred dollars _____ month.

b. Change the sentences to passive voice:

i. He'll have received the parcel by the end of the day.

ii. They have given the Nobel Prize in Literature to Mario Vargas Llosa.

c. Change the sentences to active voice:

i. The parcel will have been sent by the 1st of November by our service.

ii. Chopsticks are used by the Chinese for eating.

d. Identify whether the sentences are simple, compound or complex

i. She dropped the pan and the plate, but she held on to the spoon

ii. Many brave soldiers fought in the war, and they received medals

e. Fill in the blanks using the correct verb form

i. If they _____ (not get) drunk, they would not have been arrested.

ii. He _____ (be) the dog if he had got hold of a stick.

f. Correct the incorrect sentences

i. He did not abstain to smoke but persisted to purchase valuable cigars.

ii. I think you should go to abroad find a job make your life a little bit changed.

g. Fill in the blanks choosing the appropriate word from the brackets

i. I must ..... you on your handling of a very difficult situation.(Compliment / Complement)

ii. After their argument, they looked for a ..... party to solve their dispute. (Disinterested / Uninterested)

h. Change the following sentences from direct speech to indirect speech.

i. "You must stop the villain," said the secret agent to the postman.

ii. "Will you be attending the ceremony later?" the reporter ask the actress.

i. Rewrite the sentence or sentences using the word/words given as under

"I have lost my wallet. May I borrow some money from you ?"Zaki asked me.

Zaki asked me to _____.

j. Write a simple sentence each for the set of words given below.

i. ENQUIRY ; INQUIRY

ii. ANYWAY ; ANY WAY

3. Summarize the following passage. (word limit not exceeding 100 words). 04

To be obedient is to obey the orders of one's elders and superiors. There cannot be order unless there is obedience. One has to obey the laws of the country, otherwise the society cannot exist. The laws may be irksome, but, for the overall good of the law one must obey them. For instance, the laws to be obeyed on the road ensures road safety. The laws pertaining to property help society continue without hitches and hindrances. Even in our body our limbs obey the commands of the brains unless they are diseased. Obedience is essential for the enforcement of order. Obedience includes obedience to one's parents and elders. Parents are the best well wishers of their children. From their experience, they know what is good for their children. They would never mean ill for them. For the sake of the well being of the children, parents insist on obedience. Obedient children grow into fine children. They are not only loved by their parents but also by others connected with the household and by the neighbours. When children obey parents they are happy.Circumstances as they may be, parents may set certain norms. Children may not understand their implications, but if they obey, very often they will steer of dangers. For instance, the parent may warn his son of bad company. If the son obeys, he will grow unscathed. The parents may insist on personal cleanliness, keeping things neat and tidy, being regular in studies and so on and so forth. If the boy or girl obeys the parents in such and other things, he or she will surely grow into a finer one. Of course the parents' example may be forceful enough. If the parent shows how he is obedient, the son will naturally be obedient. There cannot be a better story than Casabianca on the deck. The father had asked the boy not to leave the deck until the parent returned. The ship was on fire, the father was dead and other sailors asked Casabianca to leave the deck and escape for life. But the boy would not leave, for father had asked him not to. The fate of the boy could be conceived but Casabianca has become immortal because he obeyed his father.

Being obedient to parents and elders will have to be followed in life. An obedient servant is always liked and respected. But for the unquestioning obedience of servants big establishments cannot be run. Unless one knows the value of obedience and has been practising it, suddenly he cannot become obedient. Servants who are obedient are preferred to clever ones. One may argue that blind obedience won't do good. Where one can prove the other is wrong, strict obedience can be waived. This happened sometimes; a junior may have a brilliant idea and without infraction of obedience he may put up his idea in the appropriate manner. Obedience, just like charity must begin at home. Parents have a duty in bringing up children to be obedient and loving.

4. Write a 100 word paragraph on the picture given below. 04

3

5. a. Read the following passage and make notes using the Cornell method. 04

"The Weather"

Through human history, weather has altered the march of events and caused some mighty cataclysms. Since Columbus did not know where he was going or where he had arrived when he got there, the winds truly deserve nearly as much credit as he for the discovery of America. Ugly westerlies helped turn the 1588 Spanish Armada away from England in a limping panic. Napoleon was done in twice by weather: once by the snow and cold that forced his fearful retreat from Moscow, later by the rain that bedevilled him at Waterloo and caused Victor Hugo to write: "A few drops of water ... an unseasonable cloud crossing the sky, sufficed for the overthrow of a world." In 1944 the Allied invasion of Normandy was made possible by a narrow interval of reasonably good weather between the bad. It was so narrow, in fact, that Supreme Allied Commander Dwight Eisenhower later expressed gratitude to "the gods of war". Paganism dies hard.

Every year brings fresh reminders of the weather's power over human life and events in the form of horrifying tornadoes, hurricanes and floods. These leave behind forgettable statistics and unforgettable images of devastated towns and battered humanity that can only humble people in the face of such wrath. Farmers often suffer the most, from the drought and plagues of biblical times to the hailstorms or quick freezes that even today can wipe out whole crops in minutes. Icy assaults serve as reminders of the inescapable vulnerability of life and social well-being to the whims of the weather. And history is packed with reminders of far worse. The weather, for example, provoked a major social dislocation in the United States in the 1930's when it turned much of the South-west into the Dust Bowl.

No wonder, then, that man's great dream has been some day to control the weather. The first step toward control, of course, is knowledge, and scientists have been hard at work for years trying to keep track of the weather. The United States and other nations have created an international apparatus that maintains some 100 000 stations to check the weather round the clock in every sector of the globe and, with satellites, in a good deal of the more than 16 billion cubic kilometres of the atmosphere. With computers on tap and electronic eyes in the sky, modern man has thus come far in dealing with the weather, alternately his nemesis and benefactor. Yet man's predicament today is not too far removed from that of his remote ancestors. For all the advances of scientific forecasting, in spite of the thousands of daily bulletins and advisories that get flashed about, the weather is still ultimately capricious and unpredictable. Man's dream of controlling it is still just that -- a dream.

OR

b. Read the following passage and make notes using Concept Mapping method.

In 1987, I visited a south Indian game forest known for its wild elephants. Early one morning, I set off with a friend to walk in the forest. After a mile or so we came across a herd of about ten elephants, including small calves, peacefully grazing. My friend stopped at a respectful distance, but I walked closer, halting about twenty feet away. One large elephant looked toward me and flapped his ears.Knowing nothing about elephants, I had no idea this was a warning. Blissfully ignorant, as if I were in a zoo or in the presence of Babar or some other story-book elephant, I felt it was time to commune with the elephants. Remembering a Sanskrit verse for saluting Ganesha, the Hindu god who takes elephant form, I called "Bhoh, gajendra" - Greetings, Lord of the Elephants.

The elephant trumpeted; for a second I thought it was his return greeting. Then hissudden, surprisingly agile turn and thunderous charge in my direction made it all too clear that he did not participate in my elephant fantasies. I was aghast to see a two-ton animal come hurtling toward me. It was not cute and did not resemble Ganesha. I turned and ran wildly. I knew I was in real danger and could feel the elephant gaining on me. (Elephants, I later learned in horror, can run faster than people, up to twenty-eight miles an hour.) Deciding I would be safest in a tree, I ran to an overhanging branch and leapt up. It was too high. I ran around the tree and raced into tall grass. Still trumpeting menacingly, the elephant came running around the tree in close pursuit. He clearly meant to see me dead, to knock me down with his trunk and trample me. I thought I had only a few seconds to live and was nearly delirious with fear. I remember thinking, "How could you have been so stupid as to approach a wild elephant?" I tripped and fell in the high grass. The elephant stopped, having lost sight of me. He raised his trunk and sniffed the air, searching out my scent. Fortunately for me they have rather poor vision. I realized I had better not move. After a few long moments he turned away and raced off in another direction, looking for me. Soon I quietly picked myself up and, trembling, made my way slowly back to where my terrified friend had stood watching the whole episode, convinced that she would witness my death.Rudimentary knowledge of elephants would have kept me safe: a herd with small calves is particularly alert to danger; elephants do not like their space invaded; flapping ears are a direct warning. The encounter itself was nothing but a projection of my own wish that a wild elephant would want to meet me. It was wrong to think that I could communicate with a strange elephant under these circumstances. Yet he communicated very clearly to me: he was angry and I should leave. I believe this is a realistic description. What fascinated me about animals was the ready access they seemed to have to their emotions. They demonstrate their feelings constantly. Annoy them, they have no hesitation in showing it. By contrast with animals, people's emotions are often distanced.

6. a. Write a letter to your parents giving them details of the preparation for your semester exams. 04

OR

b. Write a letter to your grandparents in about two to three paragraphs, highlighting the importance of their care, moral support and values.

7. a. Summarize in not more than 120 words, the various communicative methods practiced by animals in the wild.

Communication is part of our everyday life. We greet one another, smile or frown, depending on our moods. Animals too, communicate, much to our surprise. Just like us, interaction among animals can be both verbal or non-verbal. Singing is one way in which animals can 04 interact with one another. Male blackbirds often use their melodious songs to catch the attention of the females. These songs are usually rich in notes variation, encoding various kinds of messages. Songs are also used to warn and keep off other blackbirds from their territory, usually a place where they dwell and reproduce. Large mammals in the oceans sing too, according to adventurous sailors. Enormous whales groan and grunt while smaller dolphins and porpoises produce pings, whistles and clicks. These sounds are surprisingly received by other mates as far as several hundred kilometers away.

Besides singing, body language also forms a large part of animals' communication tactics. Dominant hyenas exhibit their power by raising the fur hackles on their necks and shoulders, while the submissive ones normally "surrender" to the powerful parties by crouching their heads low and curling their lips a little, revealing their teeth in friendly smiles. Colors, which are most conspicuously found on animals are also important means of interaction among animals. Male birds of paradise, which have the most gaudycolored feathers often hang themselves upside down from branches, among fluffing plumes, displaying proudly their feathers, attracting the opposite sex. The alternating black and white striped coats of zebras have their roles to play too. Each zebra is born with a unique set of stripes which enables its mates to recognize them. When grazing safely, their stripes are all lined up neatly so that none of them loses track of their friends. However, when danger such as a hungry lion approaches, the zebras would dart out in various directions, making it difficult for the lion to choose his target. Insects such as the wasps, armed with poisonous bites or stings, normally have brightly painted bodies to remind other predators of their power. Hoverflies and other harmless insects also make use of this fact and colored their bodies brightly in attempts to fool their predators into thinking that they are as dangerous and harmful as the wasps too.

OR

b. Write a paragraph of about 150 words on the importance of communication

8. a. Fill in each blank with a suitable word. 04

Samantha and her friend, Stephanie, were at the shopping center, on their way to the cinema upstairs. Just as Samantha was about to step into the elevator, she spotted a _____ face. "Mrs Lim! Is it you ? Do you _____ me ? It's me, Samantha, your ex-pupil !"Mrs Lim stared at her momentarily and finally _____ into a wide smile. Stephanie was her pupil many years back when she used to teach in a primary school. Now, Samantha was _____ twenty-two years old. The two of chatted for a while and _____ telephone numbers. They promised to _____ up one day over a cup of coffee.About two months after the chance meeting, Mrs Lim received a text _____ on her phone from Samantha. She wanted to arrange a coffee date with Mrs Lim. Samantha and Mrs Lim got together a week later.

OR

b. Write a story on the proverb "lock the stable door after the horse has bolted". Word limit – 250 words. (clue: Once a mistake has been made or an error committed, it's too late to take precautions to prevent it from happening).

9. a. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below in full sentences. 04

I had emerged relatively unscathed from the encounter with Mr. Mckim in his office, but it was unfortunately not my last encounter with the principal. In my next year at school, I came across Dr. Gruening, a highly educated, refined gentleman who had come from Germany just before World War II. To a bunch of fourteen-year old students, however, he was a weak and incompetent man who could be taken full advantage of. His classes were always an opportunity from us to fool around and have fun at his expense. I myself was an active participant in this mockery although I did not dislike Dr. Gruening. On his part, Dr. Gruening magnanimously ignored most of our pranks until one day when he lost his temper and sent me to Mr. Mckim. Dr. Gruening's note led me once again to the chair in Mr. Mckim's office. Recognition dawned on his face when he saw me and I began to pray hopefully. Consulting my record, he looked puzzled as if he did not expect to see what he had just seen. I had maintained such good grades but had so many discipline marks against me. After much thought, he said, "Ask your father to come and see me." I felt ill. The next day, I was again at the office, this time with my father. Seeing that my father was determined to keep me in the school, Mr. Mckim gave a fairly reasonable sentence. I was to report to him forty-five minutes before school every morning for the next month and read 'Great Expectations'. My detention was a great joke to all the other students who had heard the news but I myself enjoyed the book very much.About a week later, Dr. Gruening brought a stack of papers into the classroom. The class proceeded as usual but at the end of the lesson, everyone started crowding around Dr. Gruening, asking questions. I had no idea what was going on until later when someone came up to me and whispered, "We took a copy of Gruening's examination. We're working on the answers but make sure you get enough wrong." The next day, the papers were discreetly passed to me. After much deliberation, I put the copy in my drawer without looking at it and continued to study my German. The day of the examination came and went. I did fairly well while those who had participated unfairly and unjustly did excellently. After class, Dr. Gruening asked me to see him. To my surprise, he told me he was disappointed in me since it was an easy examination and it was obvious that I had not studied. Frustrated, I blurted that I had studied very hard and that it had not been an easy examination. Realizing that I might have said too much, I mumbled an apology and waited for him to dismiss me. He pondered for a long time and then said, "Yes, it was not an easy examination. You studied hard, I know. You did what you should have done." The next day, Dr. Gruening came up with his own method of retaliation and announced that there would be another examination in two days. The results this time round were more realistic. I did about the same, while the others did considerably worse. From that day on, everyone paid full attention in Dr. Gruening's class.

Answer the following questions using complete sentences

i. Why do you think the writer said he had 'emerged relatively unscathed' (paragraph1) after seeing the principal?

ii. What is the meaning of 'magnanimously' (paragraph 1)?

iii. Why did the writer and his friends continue to play pranks during Dr. Gruening'sclass ?

iv. Quote the five-word phrase in paragraph 2 that tells us the principal remembered the writer.

v. Explain clearly why Mr.Mckim was 'puzzled' (paragraph 2).

vi. Explain clearly why Mr.Mckim was 'puzzled' (paragraph 2)

OR

b. Write a story based on the conversation given below. Word limit not exceeding 100 words.

It's Very Temperamental !!!

Billie - Why has the photocopier stopped ?

Lesley - Oh, it's probably because the paper has jammed. You'll have to open the door and look inside the machine to check.

Billie - Oh yes, I can see where a sheet of paper has got stuck.

Lesley - You need to follow the instructions printed inside the door to remove it and restart the machine.

Billie - That wasn't too difficult. Well, I'll restart the machine and hope for the best.

Lesley - You'll need a lot of hope for that machine. It's very temperamental and really needs replacing.

10 Write a brief note on the Importance of Practical experience and exposure in the field of Engineering. Give three advantages and disadvantages of Classroom teaching and Practical training. 06

11 What is listening? Write in detail the importance of listening along with the advantages and disadvantages of listening. Distinguish good and badlistening with two examples each . 06

12. a. Expand the story given below. Wordlimit not exceeding 300 words. 06

"Winter Games".

Every _____ years, athletes from around the world gather to _____ in the Winter Games of the Olympics. The athletes, who _____ extremely hard, are chosen to _____ their countries. The games begin with the _____ ceremony, where the athletes _____ in front of an audience. The Winter Games is comprised of many different _____. There are sledding events such as the _____ and the _____. There are skiing events such as _____ and _____. There are also team sports such as _____. Every Olympics some new events are added such as _____, which was added in the 1998 Nagano Olympic Games. The dream of every athlete is to make it to the _____, which is where the medals are handed out. The first place winners receive the _____ medal and have the _____ of hearing their countries' _____ played. The second place winners receive the _____ medal and the third place winners receive the _____ medal. Often, the winners are _____ by who has the _____ time. Events such as the _____ skating are decided this way. Other events such as _____ skating are determined by a panel of _____, who give marks according to artistic and technical ability.

OR

b. CAMPING

When the weather starts to get warm, many families like to experience the _____ air of the country away from the _____ of the city. They pack up their _____ and a _____ full of food and head out to the woods near a body of water such as a _____ or a _____. After arriving at the _____, the first thing to do is _____ up, the _____. The Campfire At night, people sit around the _____ and _____ scary stories or _____ songs. Somebody has to _____ wood for the fire. To do this, they'll need an _____. If anybody gets hungry, they can _____ hotdogs or _____ over the fire. Camping activities One thing people like to do in the woods is put on their boots and go _____. Another thing they like to do is grab a rod, some hooks, and some worms and go _____.

13. a. Fill in the blanks with phrases from the box given below. Each phrase can be used only once. 06 adds up to, hung up on, snap out of, get on with, wake up in, cut down on, coming out on, went up against, Keep out of, check in on.

i. Your father and your uncle are in a heated debate about the ownership of the house. You best _____ it," said Betty to her son.

ii. We need to _____ our expenses as the prices of goods are going up.

iii. Now that everyone is finally here, let's _____ it," said the impatient manager.

iv. Samson was surprised to _____ his room. The last thing he remembers is passing out on the street.

v. It was just their luck that in their first dance off, they are _____ last year's champions.

vi. "That rude receptionist _____ me while I was in mid-sentence," said an agitated Mrs. Stephen.

OR

b. Each of the following sentences contains at least one preposition error. Correct the errors and rewrite the corrected sentences.

i. I tried to interrupt into their conversation but was told on.

ii. It is important to take pride of whatever we do on life.

iii. I left home at Sunday morning to catch a flight for England.

iv. He was scolded from the teacher for failing to pass the test.

v. For all that excitement. I had forgotten to take my present for him.

vi. My parents are not in good terms so we tried to patch things on.