Technology, especially applicable to ITC and telecommunications is changing rapidly in the recent days. Innovation is critical for electronic companies to survive in the market. They have been investing much of their resources in innovation for new technology to remain in the market. In their research, many of them are being caught up by time thus what they bring into the market becomes obsolete at a rapid phase. Therefore emanate from the electronic geniuses should be well timed. One of the most current achievements is the Savvy smart phones. The battery life is one of the many considerations that make this a winning technology.

The most fundamental use of smart phones is internet for the users. Through the WiFi, internet is speeded up more than in a typical 3G network connection network. However, the connectivity also affects the battery power. New subconscious modes have come up which extends to battery life by almost fifty percent. Smart phones use idle state mode to extend the life of a battery while staying stand by to enabling a fast connection to the internet, as and when the user desires.

A breakthrough feature in this technology is that when a smart phone is in the idle state or power saving module, the WiFi is still active. The system still remains alert to any incoming packet data or alert information and also searching for other connections that are convenient and faster. Blackberries or i-phones that are WiFi enabled provide the customers with choices of available networks. The security of communications is also well enhanced, including the internet security of data transfer. These services were initially only accessible by only a selected few as business and corporate executives but now it's available to all users as it touches on all aspects of life. Even the small and micro entrepreneurs, students and anyone else who can afford the phone can make use of the wide variety of features that are provided.

Many phone manufacturing are adopting this technology so as to compete effectively in the market. Also this will enhance efficiency in the management or running businesses from a remote end. It will reduce the size of communication and ITC equipments that a person carries while on the move. With the world becoming an integrated place with social networks and business operations merging across borders, availability of WiFi enabled technologies makes staying connected an easy task. 05

Although I love movies, going to see them drives me slightly crazy. First of all, getting to the movie can take a lot of time. I have a thirty five-minute drive down a congested highway. Then, with a popular film, I usually have to wait in a long line at the ticket booth. Another problem is that the theater itself is seldom a pleasant place to be. A musty smell suggests that there has been no fresh air in the theater since it was built. Half the seats seem to be falling apart. And the floor often has a sticky coating that gets on your shoes. The worst problem of all is some of the other moviegoers. Kids run up and down the aisle. Teenagers laugh and shout at the screen. People of all ages loudly drop soda cups and popcorn tubs, cough and burp, and elbow you out of the armrest on either side of your seat. All in all, I would rather stay home and wait for the latest movie hits to appear on TV in the safety and comfort of my own living room.

There are basically two types of auctions: ascending-bid auctions and descending-bid auctions. Ascending-bid auctions start out with a low bid for an object. The price of the object is gradually raised until only one bidder remains. By contrast, descending-bid auctions start out with a high bid and the price is progressively lowered until a customer expresses a willingness to purchase the object. Both procedures have a number of variants. For example, in some types of auctions a professional auctioneer declares the suggested bids. In other types of auctions, however, the customers make their own bids. Another variant, used at places such as eBay or Yahoo Auction, is called a "buyout option". A high price for an item is declared. Anyone willing to pay that price is guaranteed a purchase. This variant seems to appeal consumers who dislike uncertainty: for a fixed price they are guaranteed an object. "Buyout options" are most commonly used if the seller has a stock of several copies of the same item.

Both ascending-bid and descending-bid auctions can be conducted in either open or closed formats. In open formats, all participants know what exactly how much an object is going for. For example, at many Japanese fish markets, wholesalers gather around the fish to be purchased and raise their hands as the auctioneer names progressively higher prices. In closed auctions, participants are unaware of how much other participants are willing to pay for an object. For example, a case in which participants used sealed envelopes to place their bids on a piece of real estate represents this type of auction. Though open auctions generally yield higher prices, closed formats are sometimes preferred in situations in which the privacy of the prospective buyers is considered paramount or the need to document precisely how much each party bid is high.

Rupert Brooke is dead. A telegram from the Admiral at Lemnos tells us that this life has closed at the moment when it seemed to have reached its springtime. A voice had become audible, a note had been struck, more true, more thrilling, more able to do justice to the nobility of our youth in arms engaged in this present war, than any other more able to express their thoughts of self-surrender, and with a power to carry comfort to those who watch them so intently from afar. The voice has been swiftly stilled. Only the echoes and the memory remain; but they will linger.

During the last few months of his life, months of preparation in gallant comradeship and open air, the poet-soldier told with all the simple force of genius the sorrow of youth about to die, and the sure triumphant consolations of a sincere and valiant spirit. He expected to die: he was willing to die for the dear England whose beauty and majesty he knew: and he advanced towards the brink in perfect serenity, with absolute conviction of the rightness of his country's cause and a heart devoid of hate for fellow-men.

The thoughts to which he gave expression in the very few incomparable war sonnets which he has left behind will be shared by many thousands of young men moving resolutely and blithely forward in this, the hardest, the cruelest, and the least-rewarded of all the wars that men have fought. They are a whole history and revelation of Rupert Brooke himself. Joyous, fearless, versatile, deeply instructed, with classic symmetry of mind and body, ruled by high undoubting purpose, he was all that one would wish England's noblest sons to be in the days when no sacrifice but the most precious is acceptable, and the most precious is that which is most freely proffered.
